The Little Lady

Ever since her family had moved to Pleasantville, Alice Matthews had been a mighty unhappy little girl. Oh, at first, it had all been a wonderful game and an exciting adventure . . . until school began. Then everything had gone wrong! Nobody was the least bit friendly! None of her classmates in the third grade even tried to make Alice feel at home! She didn't have one single friend!

No wonder poor Alice was lonely! No wonder she lay in bed one night, thinking about how very lonely she was, blinking tearfully at a shining star that seemed to be hanging right outside her bedroom window.

And then she wished real hard — her eyes tightly shut—that something would happen to make the kids at school like her better. Suddenly, there was a blinding flash of light! Alice's eyelids flew open in surprise—and there stood a tiny, smiling, little old lady, right in the middle of the floor!!

"Who are you?" gasped Alice.

"I am your Golden Lady!" smiled the visitor. "I am the spirit of the star you wished on! I'm here to grant your wish! Just what would you like me to do?"

Alice thought very hard. Just what would make her classmates be friendly?

"Perhaps," she said slowly, "perhaps if I were prettier, they'd like me after all!

Do you think you could make me prettier, Miss Golden Lady?"

"Inside or outside?" asked the Golden Lady softly.

"What?" asked Alice. "I—I don't understand what you mean!"

"But it's so simple, my child!" twinkled the Golden Lady. "If you want people to like you, you must be pretty inside yourself! You must think pretty thoughts, friendly thoughts, happy thoughts! You must smile prettily at the world, if you want the world to smile back at you! A pretty dress won't make your classmates play with you — unless YOU let them know YOU WANT TO PLAY WITH THEM!"

The golden circle of light around her seemed to dance in mid-air for a minute — and then it was gone, along with the Golden Lady!

"Wait!" called Alice. "Please wait . . ." But there was no answer. There was only the great, shining star outside the window, nodding and winking at her until she fell asleep.

Alice dreamt about the Golden Lady all night, and thought about her all the next day at school. Then, at recess-time, the Golden Lady's words still echoing in her ears, she smiled shyly at the girls who were playing hop-sotch. "Can I play, too?" she asked them.

"Sure you can!" smiled one of the girls. "We thought you'd never want to play with us!" They all moved over, and as Alice took her place among them, she thought she saw a flash of golden light dance over the schoolyard!

SAD SACK

A TRUE HERO

Once upon a time, there lived a little king, named Reginald, in the land of Happy Nest. This particular day, the cabinet was having a special meeting; the Army and Navy were in conference. Something had to be done. King Reginald had to be made to understand the seriousness of the nation's position. A state of emergency existed, and the King refused to recognize it.

In desperation, the Prime Minister ran into the royal chamber, "Your majesty, your majesty," he cried, "You must take action. A vicious ring of woolgatherers are gaining control of the country. Woolen clothes are being stolen from every home. And winter is coming."

King Reginald thought about the Minister's words, but it seemed to him that there must be some mistake. Why would any criminal want to steal only woolen things? Gold was so much more valuable, or even silver.

Abruptly he dismissed the official and settled down to work on his stamp collection. When he got tired, he put his official robes aside and went to sleep. The next morning he awoke and rang for his aide. He asked for his clothes to be brought to him. There was to be an official review of the guard, so he needed his full dress military uniform. He waited, five minutes, ten minutes, a half hour and finally rang the bell again. Why hadn't his uniform been brought to him?

"I'm sorry your majesty, but they're gone. Your uniforms and all your woolen clothes are missing," the aide cried.

The King was astonished. Then it must indeed be true. There were villains at work in his kingdom. They had stolen his royal robes and robbed his subjects. Something must be done, but first he had to find something to wear for the military review. His eyes lit on the velvet drapes at the window. They would make a splendid showing. Quickly he called for the royal tailor and gave the order. A half hour later, he was standing in front of the mirror looking at his new outfit. Now he could review the troops.

The people cheered as His Majesty appeared on the balcony, but King Reginald noticed with distress that not one person was wearing a single woolen garment.

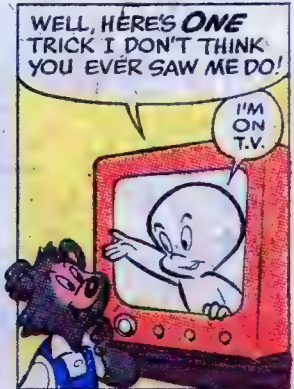

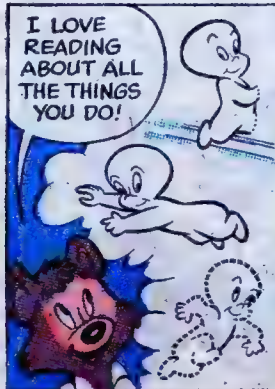

Immediately after the review, he called out the Army, Navy, Police, Firemen and the Special Investigators. All were given instructions to comb the area to the last tree and not to return without the treacherous woolgatherers.

In the meantime, the King had plans of his own. Running down to the Royal Storeroom, he picked out a huge ball of red wool and started walking in the direction of the woods. When he thought he had just about hit center, he started rolling out the wool, leaving a trail behind him all the way back to the Palace grounds. Then he called for the Palace Guards and told them to take their stations while he held tightly to the small ball of wool remaining.

Two hours later, when the Army, Navy, Police, Firemen and Special Investigators returned empty-handed, they found King Reginald triumphantly holding one end of a red wool ball at the other end of which was a masked robber ... the woolgatherer, who had followed the red wool hoping to get it all, and had instead walked right into the King's trap. When questioned severely, the robber broke down and confessed that he was a manufacturer of woolen clothes, and in order to insure good business for the winter, he was stealing everybody's woolen clothes, so that they would be forced to buy new ones.

But thanks to the King's clever plan, the nation was saved, everybody's clothes were returned, and King Reginald was the hero of his people.

Some of the larger prizes require more sales or extra money as explained in the Big Prize Book.
